What the heck is going on?

Why is Facebook suddenly flooded with hundreds of millions of gibberish posts like these, that get immense engagement (likes and shares)?

In many cases they're coming from pages purporting to be “blogs,” which in fact are nodes in an “affiliate network.”

In many cases they're coming from pages purporting to be “blogs,” which in fact are nodes in an “affiliate network.”

These networks are like Tupperware, LuLaRoe, Herbalife or Amway: they sell clicks, and collect Facebook “likes” and comments in order to sell that engagement to ad networks.

Where is the money — the incentive — coming from for these “affiliate networks”?

Hey there friends, it's Breast Cancer Awareness month, so I've decided to share my own story. Breast cancer isn't something I expected to deal with at age 43, but I can't express how grateful I am for early detection. If you're due for a mammogram, please call to schedule one today - it could save your life. (Find resources to help with low or no cost mammograms in the post.)

It's Always Autumn

October 19 at 12:19 PM ·

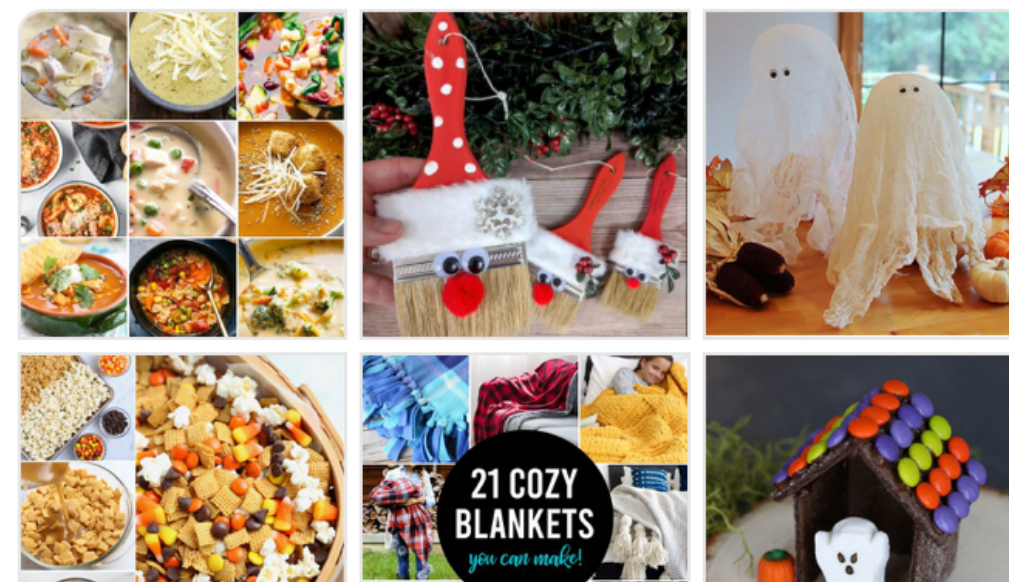

Hey there friends, it's Breast Cancer Awareness month, so I've decided to share my own story. Breast cancer isn't something I expected to deal with at age 43, but I can't express how grateful I am for early detection. If you're due for a mammogram, please call to schedule one today - it could save your life. (Find resources to help with low or no cost mammograms in the post.)

But look at her audience numbers!

Facebook allows advertisers (their actual customers) to pull user profile data from anyone interacting with their content.

Facebook allows advertisers (their actual customers) to pull user profile data from anyone interacting with their content.

Someone appears to be pouring enormous energy and effort into a data collection project aimed at building personality profiles from social media interaction...again.

This has been tried before, most prominently by Cambridge Analytica back in 2016.

THE NUMBER OF PEOPLE WHO CONSTANTLY DO THOSE "NAMETESTS" ON FACEBOOK

IS TOO DAMN HIGH !

The “...is with...” posts generate orders of magnitude more engagement!

The “...is with...” posts generate orders of magnitude more engagement!

How this works is murky, but it's clear that someone has found a way to gain absolutely stellar reach for these apparent spam posts.

What they have in common is help from these sketchy “affiliate networks.”

Now on to even more troubling posts following the same pattern...

If you spend any time on Facebook you've probably noticed a blizzard of question memes coming from clickbait accounts.

You've likely either commented on them yourself or seen comments from close friends.

Many of these posts look like they're probing for answers to security/verification questions, but the ugly reality is that your passwords are nearly worthless.

How valuable would it be to build up profiles of millions of social media accounts based on these answers, while also learning the contours of their social networks?

How valuable would it be to build up profiles of millions of social media accounts based on these answers, while also learning the contours of their social networks?

Feed that kind of sentiment data through a machine learning algorithm and someone could develop a dataset on which to build a powerful disinformation campaign.

Someone seems to think there's value here, investing significant time and money by recruiting affiliate networks to distribute this content and gather results.

A high school football star had a rape charge against him dropped after sixteen year old girl confessed that the rape never happened. He spent almost six years falsely imprisoned and broke down when the case was moved to dismissed.

How old are you? Where do you live? Where do you like to vacation? How do you feel about certain laws?

How old are you? Where do you live? Where do you like to vacation? How do you feel about certain laws?

Look at the comments (often hundreds of thousands!) and you'll see people simply posting that data, plus specific details.

Thanks to advances in sentiment analysis and the declining cost of compute power, it's possible to get remarkable insights from masses of text-based data.

Without more research, or perhaps even a subpoena, it's impossible to nail down exactly what's happening here, but there are some clear precedents.

If these “affiliate networks” aren't being used to improve some voter profiling project, it would be a surprise.

Naturally, Facebook is either oblivious to these actors (hard to believe), or is complicit in the scheme because it brings in a lot of cash.

What can you do?

#1 — Don't interact with pages / posts from anyone YOU DON'T KNOW PERSONALLY.

As much fun as it might be to let the world know what your favorite 60's TV show was or if you like tacos, please show some self-restraint and DON'T SHARE THAT INFO — even if your friends are “tagged” into the post!

It's because they were tagged into the post that it appeared in your feed in the first place!

#2 — Keep your private life private.

Don't over-share.

Don't share with strangers.

#3 — Just don't!

Or, if you feel you MUST, do what I do ...
sometimes.
